

Researching Multilingually & Translating Cultures Hub

Richard Fay, Mariam Attia, Jane Andrews and Prue Holmes

Initial Focus:

As the CATC session is about to begin, we may be feeling excited at the prospect but also perhaps a little anxious about what this will entail for us as we explore “Creative methodologies: In Action and Reflection” and how such methodologies might enrich our research in coming months and years.

In preparation for the RMTC Hub session this afternoon, it would be useful to try and some of that excitement (and perhaps anxiety), and do so in the form of a curiosity. For example, we might be wondering:

- ❖ What creative methodologies will we be exploring together?
- ❖ How will I feel during this session?
- ❖ Where will this session take me (in or out of my comfort zone)?
- ❖ Which methodologies seem most promising for me?
- ❖ Why might I adopt some of these methodologies?

These articulations use language (rather than e.g. visuals); they use English (rather than another language); and they are framed as questions using differing Wh-words (What, How, Where, Which, Why, etc).

What is one curiosity you have at the beginning of our time together?
